An exercise to look at the definitions, language and perception of bullying.

Introduction

This exercise uses team working and reflective learning to increase knowledge and understanding of terms and vocabulary used when talking about bullying.

Exercise

The exercise is based on the TV programme 'Blockbusters' and uses a grid made up of hexagonal sections. The grid is included in this file and each section has a letter or series of letters. Each of these stands for a word, phrase or the initials of a person. All of the answers relate to bullying.

Split the group into smaller groups of four. In each group you need a quiz master, a person to play solo and two to play as a pair. This makes 2 teams, team '1' is the name of the team with the person playing solo and '2' is the team name of the pair. The aim of the game is to correctly guess what the letters stand for from a clue the quiz master reads out. When you or your pair gets a question right then the quiz master writes a large number '1' or '2' in the hexagon.

The person playing solo starts and needs to try and make a line down the board, the pair have to have a line moving across the board.

Team '1' goes first and chooses any letter(s) from the board. The quiz master using the list of questions included reads out the clue. The first team to call out either '1' or '2' based on their team's name gets to guess the answer. It is important that they do not shout out the answers. The quiz master's decision is final.

The game carries on until one of the teams gets across the board.

If both teams guess incorrectly then the quiz master may give an alternative clue to the word or phrase etc. and the first to say their team name and guess correctly wins that hexagon.

Summary

Sum up by asking the groups to feedback how they got on.

Ask if there were any words that people didn't know and discuss any questions or comments raised by the group.

You could finish by collecting all of the sheets and doing a quick recap to see how many of the letters and therefore words, names or phrases the group can remember.
